Data Backup: Are server or NAS backups really the best option?

If you or someone you know has experienced a hard drive failure, you may find yourself reevaluating your company's strategy for backing up critical business files. But after hearing about servers or NAS backups crashing, you're probably hesitant to use on-site machines as your only point of backup.

On-site backups are not the best option for your small business data backups:

- Hard drives and storage devices are prone to failure
- Theft can leave you without any backup at all
- Fires and floods not only threaten your business, but your on-site backups as well
- Natural disasters like hurricanes and tornadoes can destroy machines
